

Forward

Whether globalization is sustainable is a contested issue. This invisible power has come with human pressure and demands on environment. It is must to go in to new direction to make it sustainable in the present time. It can be linked with carrying capacity of our ecosystem. Globalized trade flow many products for consumption but the thin line between production and consumption cycling is also important to analyze for the sustainable ecological growth.

Harnessing the opportunities created by globalization is a big challenge. The traditional knowledge of the Himalayan landscape is its periphery and going to its extinction. I think this puts the major challenge in front of academic community throughout India and world. The grassroots narratives of the globalization are mandatory to narrate for putting or inculcating new ideas in the academic domain. We are living in the global village. All aspects of globalization like political, economic, sociological, technological are impacted by this global thrust. The question arises here how the academic community comes forward with new balanced thrust in the research areas of globalization.

I hope that two days National Conference (8-9/04/2019) on "Globalisation and its impact in Western Himalayan Landscape" will ignite some vital issues and deliberations. The conference was fruitful for the audience including students. The objective of this national conference was to bring forward the new ideas for the balanced ecological development in the western Himalaya. At the same time this platform has also carved out new theoretical ideas related with globalization and its practicability in the 21st century. It provided the new vistas for the understanding of various issues in this domain.

I would like to congratulate all the contributors for their academic research in this domain. I would also like to congratulate and editor and co editors for shaping the ideas of contributors and bringing it in book form.

I wish for the success of this book.
